

The Southern New Jersey Professional Societies

Presents:

"NAS Storyboarding and the Benefits of Cultivating a Knowledge Community" Cuong Nguyen, FAA ANG-E5A, Computer Scientist

Communities of Practice are groups of people who share a passion about a topic and deepen their knowledge and expertise by interacting frequently. Although the definition of a Community of Practice has changed overtime, the idea that effective knowledge creation is socially created and presented as shared stories has yielded big payoffs to communities and organizations that embrace it. From eBay to Chrysler Auto, organizations that embrace these types of knowledge communities have benefitted from the increase in aggregate knowledge. The Animated Storyboards for the National Airspace System is a platform that can facilitate a knowledge community for the FAA and NextGen Systems by putting less emphasis on traditional documentation and more focus on meaningful interactions with subject matter experts and users, thereby creating an intuitive learning product fueled by a highly collaborative environment.
